From the President & CEO

Dear Member,

This month, WTTW will bring you a new eight-hour docuseries from award-winning producer and frequent Ken Burns collaborator Lynn Novick: Crime and Punishment in America. Across four consecutive nights, the film will explore the 400-year history of criminal justice – and injustice – in America from the 1600s to the early 21st century, through the lived experiences of individuals whose personal stories will bring this sweeping, epic story vividly to life. On page 4, Novick takes us behind the scenes of the film's production, reflecting on what she learned in the process and what she hopes viewers will take away from the series.

November is Native American Heritage Month, and WTTW will mark the occasion with several new documentaries, including She Cried That Day, an exploration of the Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women crisis through the story of a woman grappling with her sister's unsolved murder; Bad Press, chronicling the Muscogee Nation's fight to restore its free and independent press after it was replaced by government-controlled media; Coming Home: From Shadowland to Spiritworld, following the Kashia Band of Pomo Indians' efforts to reclaim their ancestral lands along the Sonoma Coast; and Medicine Ball, examining the history of basketball in Indigenous boarding schools through the perspectives of Native college players at the University of Minnesota Morris.

On WFMT, November begins with the season premiere of the Ryan Opera Center Recital Series, featuring first-year ensemble member Shiddharth (Sid) Chand, the first New Zealand native and South Asian artist to be named to the group, alongside baritone Sihao Hu and first-year pianist/coach Myungseo Kim. Also this month, Live from WFMT welcomes soprano Laura Strickling and pianist Daniel Schlosberg; the Balourdet Quartet with pianist Marta Aznavoorian; Chicago native and rising-star pianist Joshua Mhoon; and members of the Haymarket Opera Company for performances in WFMT's Fay and Daniel Levin Performance Studio. WFMT also celebrates the 50th anniversary of the Dame Myra Hess Concerts with the launch of the Distinguished Hess Alumni series, featuring acclaimed clarinetist David Shifrin and pianist Marina Iwao.

And finally, as voters prepare to head to the polls this November, WTTW News and PBS News Hour will provide comprehensive coverage of the local and federal midterm elections, offering trusted reporting and analysis to help voters make informed decisions. Be sure to explore the comprehensive WTTW News Voter Guide (wttw.com/voterguide) for information on the candidates, key races, and issues on the ballot this year.

In this season of Thanksgiving, all of us at WTTW and WFMT are especially grateful for your continued support. Thank you for making everything we do possible, and enjoy the month ahead!

Sincerely,

Sandra Cordova Micek
President & CEO

Inside America's Justice System

Crime and punishment in America is a complex subject, often reduced to simple narratives. A new four-part, eight-hour documentary explores 250 years of history through a wide range of perspectives, from former police commissioner Bill Bratton and retired Supreme Court Justice Stephen Breyer to formerly incarcerated poet and activist Reginald Dwayne Betts and a former corrections officer.

Crime and Punishment in America airs on WTTW November 16-19 at 7:00 pm and will also be available to stream on wttw.com and the PBS app. The series is directed by Lynn Novick and executive produced by Ken Burns and Sam Pollard. We spoke with Novick ahead of her October 29 visit to Chicago for a special WTTW screening event.

The Guide: This is a topic that's constantly discussed, particularly in politics, but you don't necessarily think of it as having a history.

Lynn Novick: I agree. With this particular set of institutions, I think we have the sense it has always been like this, and this is just a given of how people do things. Working on College Behind Bars made me realize how little I know about this history, and how curious I was about how we got here.

The Guide: How did you decide what to focus on in such a huge topic?

Novick: We relied on the expertise of people who know a lot more than us, as we always do on every project. So that included historians and scholars who've studied American history, and the history of incarceration and policing, and the justice system over time; and also people who have lived experience in the world of being incarcerated or put in jail or prison. Or judges or prosecutors: people who have worked in the criminal justice system. There's a wide range of perspectives that they brought. And then we just had to try to focus and pick stories and examples that would illustrate larger themes.

The Guide: Why did you use those first-hand stories to scaffold this?

Novick: In all the work I've done with Ken Burns, it's the same. We can hear history told as an abstraction that doesn't really have human dimensions, or we can try to present it as something that is about people. That's the way we've told pretty much all the stories I've worked on in my career, and [it has] maybe never [been] more important than [in] this particular story.

The Guide: Why do you say that?

Novick: The way that we administer justice in this country has a way of removing the individuals and creating blank faces, if you will, just numbers and statistics. You get a number when you're arrested or locked up incarcerated, and you sort of stop being seen as a person. So it was important to us to put the people back into the story on all sides.

If you're a viewer, you're not going to learn about everybody that this happened to, but you're going to learn about one person. And from their personal experience and the way they tell it and what they remember and what happened to them, you can begin to feel something about what this is like. That's what we're after.

The Guide: So much of this history is one of attempted reform, from the very beginning.

Novick: That was one of the most fascinating things for all of us working on the film: to learn that the prison itself, the penitentiary itself, was created as a reform. It was presented as an alternative to public executions and torturing people for what were often small crimes, because there was no idea of rehabilitating people through the punishment system. It was just pure punishment.

The idea that we would create a system to help people rehabilitate themselves and to repent and be better, and the way we would do that would be through incarceration – that seems to us just a given, that that's what the system is supposed to do. But it was a new idea in the early days of the American experiment.

The Guide: And it's one of the ways in which America is exceptional in this history.

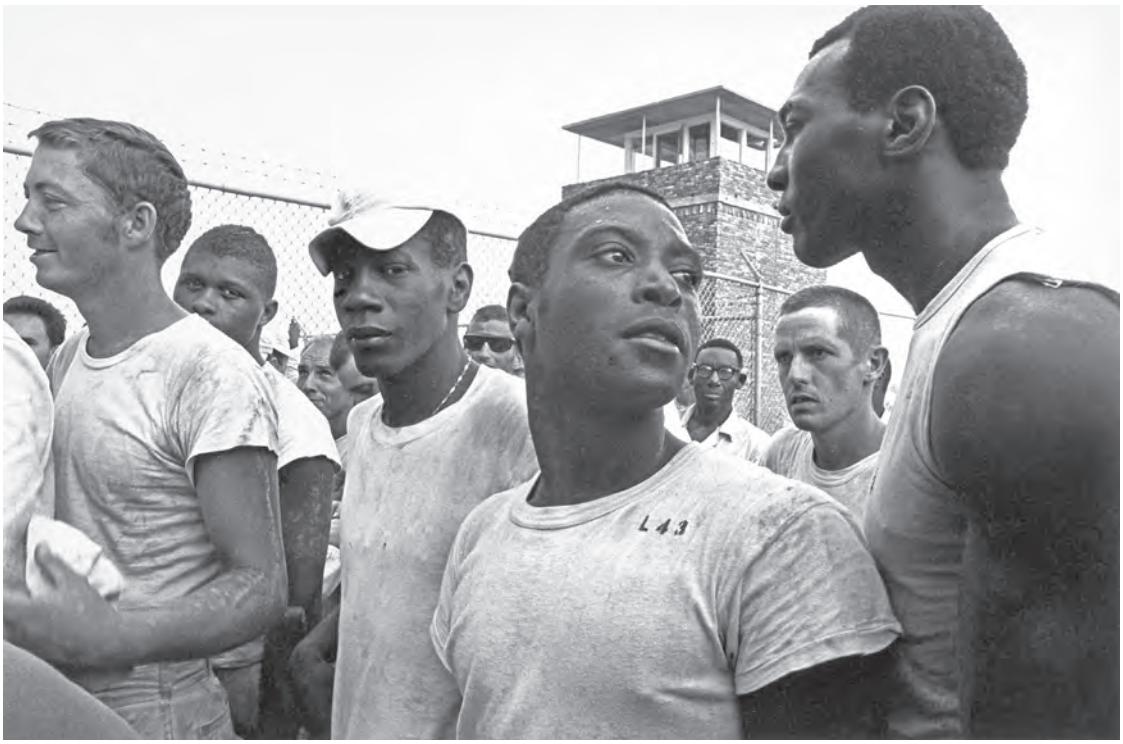

Novick: This is one where we are definitely different from a lot of other countries. We created this idea and we've doubled down on it multiple times, despite the way in which it was proven to not deliver the promise that we thought it should.

[Another way] in which America is somewhat exceptional is how crime policy and politics are intertwined. That's not the same everywhere. And that does have a lot to do with why we do things the way we do. You see politicians speaking about making America safe again, about being tough on crime, about "three strikes and you're out," especially in the last 50 years. I think those positions are not really driven by research and smart policy as much as getting votes. People are scared; they want you to do something. A little girl was kidnapped and it's a horrible nightmare for everybody who hears about it. So what are we to do about that? It's an opportunity for someone who's in a political position to use that fear and desire for something to be done to pass laws that aren't actually going to address the problem that caused this to happen.

I think we might be the only country that elects prosecutors. I think judges in other Western countries are a little bit more insulated. But fear is an incredibly powerful human emotion. That's real and we have to reckon with that.

I have compassion for the politicians, because they're trying to get elected and make policies that they think people want, or that they know people want because that's what got them elected. So we really can't just see this as a top-down problem. It's very much a bottom-up problem. We the people are responsible for the people we elect and the policies they embrace. No one's shoving this down the throats of the American people. ■

Ryan Opera Center Recital Series

October was a busy month for current members and alumni of The Patrick G. and Shirley W. Ryan Opera Center. '25 alum baritone Ian Rucker had the honor of singing the National Anthem at the opening game of Northwestern University's new Ryan Field; '26 alum bass-baritone Christopher Humbert, Jr. returned to Lyric Opera as Masetto in Don Giovanni; and in the public final round of auditions, the Ryan Opera Center selected the ensemble singers for the 2027/28 season. Meanwhile, the 2026/27 WFMT recital season begins this month featuring second-year ensemble baritone Sihao Hu, first-year ensemble pianist/coach Myungseo Kim, and first-year tenor Sid Chand. The Fijian-Indian tenor is the first singer of South Asian heritage to join ROC and is also the first New Zealander to earn a place in the ensemble. Chand's program for WFMT will include an arrangement of "Hine e Hine," a traditional Māori lullaby known to New Zealanders as the song that for many years ended the broadcast day on TVNZ.

Laura Strickling and Daniel Schlosberg

Live from WFMT

Live performances this month include the award-wining Balourdet Quartet with pianist Marta Aznavoorian (November 16), Chicago-native and rising star pianist Joshua Mhoon (November 23), and the period-instrument Haymarket Opera Company (November 30). The month kicks off with a vocal recital by soprano Laura Strickling and pianist Daniel Schlosberg. One of the leading proponents of contemporary American art song, Laura Strickling earned her second Best Classical Vocal Solo Album Grammy nomination with Daniel Schlosberg for their album 40@40, the first in a series of new works through her own song commissioning initiative. In addition to performing recitals and presenting masterclasses and lectures with chamber music organizations, music festivals, and universities around the world, Strickling is also the co-host of Cincinnati Song Initiative's SongCycle podcast and the curator of The NewMusicShelf Soprano Anthology. Her latest album, Legends: Rebellion, reunites her with pianist Joy Schreier, with whom she earned her first Grammy nomination in 2022.

Introductions

WFMT is delighted to share recent performances by the next generation of talented young musicians recorded in the Levin Studio including flutist Karen Kobayashi. An alumna of Chicago Youth Symphony Orchestras, Kobayashi is a student of Hideko Amano who first performed on Introductions as an eighth grader. Before beginning her freshman year at the Curtis Institute of Music in September, she returned to WFMT to perform with pianist Yoko Yamada-Selvaggio. On November 14, hear their 20th century selections by André Jolivet and Philippe Gaubert. 15-year-old pianist Jeremy Liu won the 2025 Crain-Maling Foundation Chicago Symphony Orchestra Young Artists Competition — at age 13! Now a high school sophomore, Jeremy is a co-director of the non-profit organization 88Keys to Cure. Enjoy his performance of music by Rachmaninoff and Felix Mendelssohn on November 28.

The Gesualdo Six

Listening to Singers

British conductor, organist, composer, and bass Owain Park is a force in the international choral scene with work spanning orchestral, choral, and theatrical repertoire. This fall, he assumed the role of Chief Conductor of the BBC Singers, having served as their Principal Guest Conductor since 2022. As the founding Artistic Director of The Gesualdo Six, Park has led the ensemble to international acclaim through recordings and performances across Europe, North America, and Asia. Their imaginative programming, which puts Renaissance masterpieces in dialogue with contemporary music, has become a hallmark of the group's work. In July of 2025, The Gesualdo Six made their Chicago debut with Concert Theatre Works's Secret Byrd —an immersive staging of William Byrd's Mass for Five Voices. In advance of the ensemble's return to Chicago this month, Owain Park joins WFMT to share favorites from the group's award-winning discography and to preview their tour program Fading.

Dame Myra Hess Concerts

This season, Classical Music Chicago celebrates the 50th anniversary of the Dame Myra Hess Concerts, marking five decades of presenting free world-class performances in downtown Chicago and introducing audiences to many of the world's most accomplished musicians at the beginning of their careers. To celebrate, five distinguished alumni of the Dame Myra Hess Concerts, whose first appearances on the series span its history, will return to perform including pianist Clayton Stephenson (November 11), violist Teng Li (March 24), pianist Inon Barnatan (April 21), and violinist Jennifer Koh (April 28). WFMT is proud to share the first program in the Distinguished Hess Alumni series: David Shifrin — one of the world's most celebrated clarinetists who has enjoyed an internationally acclaimed career as a soloist, chamber musician, educator, and artistic director — with pianist Marina Iwao, recorded in concert last month for broadcast on Classical Music Chicago's planned Thanksgiving break.

Perhaps the most, or only, conventional element of Ferruccio Busoni's Piano Concerto is its title. Nearly 75-minutes in length with five movements—the last featuring a men's chorus—and one of the largest orchestras of the entire genre, it requires nothing less than a herculean effort by the soloist, not to mention the more than 100 other musicians performing. Pianist Igor Levit, a noted champion of Busoni who has called the concerto, "a piece to widen your curse words repertoire," rises to its considerable challenges. Together with LA Phil Conductor Laureate Esa-Pekka Salonen and men of the Los Angeles Master Chorale, he explored Busoni's grand utopian vision in concerts last January. Reviewing Levit and Salonen's performance of the concerto, San Francisco Classical Voice raved "... it is truly a masterpiece. The work reveals its full stature when heard live in an electrifying performance like this one, with a first-class orchestra in an acoustically detailed hall."
