ALSO INSIDE

Earth Day is on April 22, and we'll bring you special programming throughout the month including NOVA's "Weathering the Future," Changing Planet with conservationist Dr. M. Sanjayan, and "The Sun Queen" from American Experience.

From the President & CEO

Dear Member,

This month, we'll mark the 15th anniversary of Introductions, WFMT's weekly series featuring the best and brightest pre-collegiate musicians from across the Chicago region. Listen in on April 8 as we celebrate this momentous occasion with a special episode featuring our April cover subject, cellist Jan Vargas Nedvetsky performing Villa-Lobos' Song of the Black Swan, and a performance by the top trombone quartet from the Merit School of Music, The Bone Rangers.

Earth Day is on April 22, and we'll bring you special programming throughout the month including NOVA's "Weathering the Future," examining the dramatic ways in which our weather is changing; Changing Planet with conservationist Dr. M. Sanjayan, who performs a global environmental health check on the Earth's most vulnerable ecosystems; and "The Sun Queen" from American Experience about chemical engineer Maria Telkes, who designed and built the world's first successfully solar-heated modern residence.

Also in April, you'll find a curated playlist inspired by birds in celebration of spring on wfmt.com and WFMT Presents will spotlight the Bach Week Music Festival as it prepares for its 50th anniversary with an upcoming new concert series. And on Listening to Singers, opera and Broadway star baritone Nathan Gunn will preview his performance as Emile de Becque in the New Philharmonic's April concert of South Pacific. Look for an excerpt from WFMT's Oliver Camacho interview with Gunn on page 4.

I hope you enjoy the warmer days ahead and, as always, thank you for your support.

Sincerely,

Sandra Cordova Micek
President & CEO

Father Brown

(New Season!)

Based on the short stories by G. K. Chesterton, this mystery series follows the kindly cleric as he solves crimes in his quintessentially English village and its secret gardens, country fairs, railway stations, and rural parish churches. Each episode sees Father Brown investigating a crime in his own intuitive way, always more interested in saving souls than in bringing the guilty to justice.

Nathan Gunn

A Conversation with Singer Nathan Gunn

Renowned baritone Nathan Gunn has reinterpreted such classic roles as Figaro, Don Giovanni, and Billy Budd, winning the Grammy Award for Best Opera Recording and the Metropolitan Opera's first-ever Beverly Sills Award, among many others. Now, he will explore another genre and type of role entirely when he comes to Chicago to perform the role of Emile de Becque in the New Philharmonic's Broadway in Concert: Rodgers & Hammerstein's South Pacific on April 15-16 at the McAninch Arts Center.

Gunn recently sat down for an interview with WFMT music director Oliver Camacho.

CAMACHO: There are so many facets of your career – your work in opera, branching out into musical theater, and teaching. I'd like to focus on an aspect that has been part of your brand since the start: your love of singing in English, and especially American art song.

|| My job as a singer, if I'm doing my job correctly, is no different than what a curator does with a beautiful work of art."

GUNN: My teacher William Miller...sang on the Carnation Breakfast Hour, but he also sang a lot of new work and in oratorios and operas. So when I started learning how to sing, I was always encouraged to sing in English and sing American music, not just the stuff coming out of Europe in different languages.

CAMACHO: Can you talk about how you achieved simplicity and a natural sound in your voice, especially when you sing in English? This is something we all strive for as singers. How do you approach teaching this to your students?

GUNN: Like any athlete, our bodies want to function in accordance with nature. What I teach my students is to let the big muscles deal with the sustaining of sound, which are the ones below your larynx, right below your vocal cords. And I let the mouth – the “articulators” – work independently from that. So if you’re doing it right, you can really imitate just about any language and any sound you need to, if those articulators – your tongue and the muscles in your throat and mouth – aren’t getting in the way. It can sound complicated and harder than it is. But once we singers do it correctly, we think “Oh, that’s not so unfamiliar. That’s what my body wants to do.”

CAMACHO: I want to get back to your championing of American composers. These collaborations require a high level of musicianship and an intellectual approach, especially when the text is very complicated. Nevertheless, you always find a way to deploy your voice with understandable, American English.

GUNN: My wife [pianist Julie Gunn] tells people that if you have any questions about what a poem might mean, “ask Nathan – he’s kind of a savant about the meaning of metaphors.” I don’t know if I am or not. But poetry and text have always been the primary reasons why I am drawn to a song. When you add music, the words are amplified. The first time you read Hamlet, for example, you think, “Oh, wow. I thought that, but I never knew how to express it.” I feel that is in essence what music does. My job as a singer, if class. Those can be tough because you get a very limited amount of time with each person. You try to at least point him or her in a direction that moves them along on their journey in a positive way. At the end, one of the students asked,

Julie and Nathan Gunn

I’m doing my job correctly, is no different than what a curator does with a beautiful work of art. If we can perform in a way that we’ve left our egos out so that you can just see the art, then the audience gets something meaningful out of it. But you can’t do that if you can’t understand the words – then it’s sort of pointless.

CAMACHO: I think your students are so lucky, because these concepts aren’t taught to young singers. Voice majors spend a lot of time just figuring out how to use their voices, pronunciation of other languages, how to be on stage. I’m heartened that a big opera star like you is out there preparing the next generation to be more complete artists.

GUNN: That’s really why I do it. Julie and I were in Nashville recently doing a master

“Why are you a singer? Why do you stand up in front of people and put yourself in that position?” I hadn’t really been asked that in a serious way. You can sing without an audience and really enjoy yourself. But I think I sing for audiences because it’s something that can be scary, and you can say that at least once in your life that you were not afraid – that you were absolutely present and delivered it with honesty and without any kind of barrier. [Music] is not a living thing until it goes into the ears of people and changes their lives, or moves them in some way. An individual and communal experience that can only happen live, right? ■

Solly McLeod as Tom Jones

Tom Jones on Masterpiece

(New Series!)

This new four-part miniseries reimagines The History of Tom Jones, A Foundling, Henry Fielding's classic novel that has delighted and scandalized readers since it was originally published in 1749. Following the title character's complicated journey to find real love, the series stars Solly McLeod as Tom, Sophie Wilde as Sophia, and Hannah Waddingham (Ted Lasso) as the iconic temptress Lady Bellaston. In part one: Tom and Sophia Western hit it off, despite their wildly contrasting backgrounds. Molly complicates the picture for Tom, and Blifil for Sophia.

Newcomer Lise Davidsen has been described as one of the rare “real heavy weight Wagnerian sopranos” whose voice is “miraculous” and “one in a million.” The Metropolitan Opera is banking on the 36-year-old Norwegian soprano's future already having given her star vehicles such as Liza in Tchaikovsky's Pique Dame, Chrysothemis in Strauss's Elektra, and the title role in Ariadne auf Naxos. The 2023-24 season will offer Met audiences a chance to hear operas Leonora in Verdi's La forza del destino.
