This month, WFMT Presents will feature "Rediscovered Composers," a concert that includes Margaret Bonds's Montgomery Variations, a seminal work about the civil rights movement.

From the President & CEO

Dear Member,

February is Black History Month, and on WTTW we'll premiere Building/Blocks: Architecture of Chicago's South Side, a special hosted by architecture photographer and writer Lee Bey; Live from the Harris Theater: Adrian Dunn's Emancipation, a multi-genre musical celebration of what it means to be Black and free in 21st century America; and NOVA: Star Chasers of Senegal, the story of a visionary astronomer in West Africa who attempts a high-stakes observation of a distant asteroid vital to a NASA mission. On wttw.com, meet Earl Wiley Renfroe, a pioneering Chicago orthodontist and the first Black professional to have an office in the Loop and learn about Father Augustus Tolton, the first Black Catholic priest in the U.S. and founder of a church on Chicago's South Side.

This month and throughout 2023, WTTW will launch FIRSTHAND: Life After Prison, the award-winning multiplatform, multi-year initiative focusing on the firsthand perspectives of people facing critical issues in Chicago. The project will offer an intimate look at the challenges and opportunities facing people returning to society after spending time in prison, as they seek to restart their lives while carrying the stigma of a criminal record. On page 4, you'll find an interview with documentary producer/director Mario Tarpe.

WFMT Presents will feature "Rediscovered Composers," a concert by the BBC Philharmonic that includes Margaret Bonds's Montgomery Variations, a seminal work about the civil rights movement. The program also features pianist and scholar Samantha Ege, a leading interpreter of music by underrepresented composers. LaRob K. Rafael will curate and present music by Black composers on his weekday morning Black Music Spotlight and Listening to Singers will feature a tribute to opera legend Leontyne Price, curated and co-hosted by Grammy Award-winning baritone Kenneth Overton. On wfmt.com, with Mavis Staples performing at Symphony Center this month, we'll take a look back at the iconoclastic Chicago singer and civil rights champion's greatest moments on and off stage, and share five new opera titles by Black composers, including Errollyn Wallen and Nkeiru Okoye.

Finally, please make sure to watch the WTTW News Mayoral Candidate Forum on Tuesday, February 7 – live streaming on the PBS Video app, wttw.com, Facebook, and YouTube at 7:00 pm and on Chicago Tonight at 10:00 pm.

On behalf of all of us at WTTW and WFMT, I hope you enjoy everything we have to offer this month, and thank you for making it possible.

Sincerely,

Sandra Cordova Micek
President & CEO

WTTW’s FIRSTHAND Explores the Challenges Complicating Life After Prison

FIRSTHAND:
Life After Prison
launches at wttw.com/firsthand on February 13.

By DANIEL HAUTZINGER

Is the criminal justice system meant to reform or punish? Thousands of restrictive laws govern people who have been released from prison in the United States, making it difficult for them to find housing, employment, and to restart life after they have done their time. Beginning on February 13 and throughout 2023, WTTW’s FIRSTHAND: Life After Prison examines the struggles faced by people after they have served time through a series of documentaries, expert talks, community engagement events, and a discussion guide. This month, we talked to Mario Tharpe, the producer of the documentaries and director of one of them.

THE GUIDE: Why is re-entry an important topic, even though it isn’t often discussed?

MARIO THARPE: Life after prison and recidivism are topics people kind of shy away from. I think that’s because it really requires so much work in order to try to find an answer as to how to solve the problem. Talking to our five subjects, that’s the biggest struggle. People want to look down on folks who've been incarcerated, not necessarily knowing why or what the reason is, because there are a million reasons why people unfortunately wind up going to jail or prison. It certainly is a topic that needs to continue to be discussed—but more importantly, some solutions have to come out of these discussions. And unfortunately, that's really not happening.

THE GUIDE: Why is this an important topic for you personally?

THARPE: My grandmother had ten kids, and we were all very close. The majority of my aunts and uncles went on to do great things in life, but I had two uncles who unfortunately turned to drugs. It left a lasting impression on me, because I saw what it could do to a family. I also saw them struggling to put their lives back on track, and it never happened. One of them had been clean for well over fifteen years before he passed, but ultimately, I think that their use of drugs and their stints in and out of jail played a major part in why they passed away and why they were never able to reclaim who they used to be. It was personal for me because I saw it firsthand. Working on this project was therapeutic for me.

THE GUIDE: What did you learn during this project?

THARPE: How hard the struggle is. To give you an example, we captured the release of Nicholas, [a subject of one of the documentaries], after spending 24 years in prison. Nicholas had to learn how to use a cellphone. He went to prison when he was 18, so he didn't have a driver's license, and had to learn how to drive from his mother when he was 42. He was used to dealing with cash; he didn't know how to use a debit card.

Just the things that we take for granted every day, these guys are now trying to figure out. You might think: you go to prison, you come out, you should be able to just hop right back into the swing of things.

But if you don't have the knowledge, that's a challenge.

THE GUIDE: What does approaching the topic of life after prison via personal stories do?

THARPE: Everybody's story is different. I wish that every person who is in a position to change the system could watch a hundred or two hundred of these stories. Kyle, [another documentary subject], became addicted to drugs because of a tooth infection. The dentist prescribed him some medication, and that kicked off his addiction. In order to feed his habit, he started stealing. Not everybody is in their position because they went out and made a bad decision.

THE GUIDE: Why should the general public care about the struggles of people after they've been released from prison?

THARPE: First of all, we taxpayers are paying a high price for it. And why not care about the next person? Isn't it the right thing to do? A lot of folks are really struggling, and they're quiet about it. I pre-interviewed a lot of people for this project, and many of them didn't want to tell their stories, because they didn't know how the world was going to feel about it. They didn't want to draw attention to their crime because they tried to find employment for a year and finally have a job. People shouldn't live like that. They shouldn't have to feel that way. I think the more that the average citizen hears and understands their stories – that, in a lot of cases, they're just like us – I think the better we will all be.

THE GUIDE: What does the way life after prison works in America say about the criminal justice system here?

THARPE: It needs a lot of work. The system is broken. The stories that I heard were just unbelievable. These folks have been on ten, fifteen, twenty job interviews, and the second that the employer finds out they've served some time, they're not being hired. How can we expect them to turn their life around if we're not giving them an opportunity for a job, or housing, or benefits? I hate to say this, but it seems like the system is set up for them to fail.

Not enough is being done. These are not the stories we should be hearing. We should be hearing, "I was released, and within 60 days I had a job, or I had the necessary skills to get a job."

THE GUIDE: Do you have one takeaway from working on this project?

THARPE: The resilience. They know that the journey is not going to be easy, and they are still fighting. It's a daily struggle. They are really working hard to try to fit back into life. They're strong people.

This interview has been condensed and edited.

Finding Your Roots: And Still I Rise

Dr. Henry Louis Gates, Jr. reveals the unexpected family trees of political activist, philosopher, academic, and author Angela Y. Davis and former U.S. Secretary of Homeland Security Jeh Johnson, using DNA and long-lost records to redefine notions of the Black experience and challenge preconceptions of America's past. "I am deeply proud of this series – and especially this season," Gates said. "I think it is so important today to show what we have in common, as Americans, and as human beings, despite our apparent differences."

WFMT Presents: Rediscovered Composers

Tune in for a rare opportunity to hear Margaret Bonds's Montgomery Variations. Composed in 1964 and dedicated to Martin Luther King, Jr., the work is based on events and ideas in the civil-rights movement from the Montgomery Bus Boycott through the Sixteenth Street Baptist Church bombing that killed four young Black girls in Birmingham in 1963. Due to Bonds being marginalized on the basis of gender and race, the composer only heard this work performed just once in her lifetime.
