ALSO INSIDE

We’ll mark Pride Month with an introduction to Ravinia’s new Breaking Barriers Festival with Marin Alsop, a feature on Craig Hella Johnson’s Considering Matthew Shepard, and highlights from Philadelphia Orchestra conductor Yannick Nézet-Séguin’s time at Carnegie Hall.
Dear Member,

Summer is a time for potlucks and cookouts and as the season officially begins this month, we’ll bring you The Great American Recipe – a new cooking competition series that brings ten home cooks together to showcase a range of culinary styles infused by their backgrounds from Syrian to Hungarian, Vietnamese to Mexican, Italian to Puerto Rican, Southern soul food to Filipino. Don’t miss this fun weekly series, and follow along on our website where you’ll find recipes from across the city and a place to upload your favorite summer delicacies!

Also in June, we celebrate LGBTQ+ Pride Month on WTTW with True Colors: LGBTQ+ Our Stories, Our Songs, which traces the history of the LGBTQ+ community through real-life tales and musical performances; Queer Silicon Valley, which explores the challenges of coming out in the high-tech industry; and It’s a Match, the story of two young LGBT women who discover a miraculous connection that binds them together forever.

We’ll mark Pride Month on WFMT as well, including on WFMT Presents which will feature an introduction to Ravinia’s new Breaking Barriers Festival with Marin Alsop; Craig Hella Johnson’s Considering Matthew Shepard, an oratorio on the life, death, and legacy of the murdered gay student; and highlights from Philadelphia Orchestra conductor Yannick Nézet-Séguin’s time at Carnegie Hall. On wfmt.com, from a Pride-themed cabaret to an orchestral piece of music about writer and activist James Baldwin, we’ll run down the musical and arts events to add to your Pride Month calendar.

Thank you for your membership and support of WTTW and WFMT.

Sincerely,

Sandra Cordova Micek
President & CEO

GUIDE: Why did you want to be a part of The Great American Recipe?

GRAHAM ELLIOT: I always loved the idea that we were going to focus on the food and the story, as opposed to, “You have twenty minutes to cook with one hand behind your back, using a dull knife.” And—not that everyone wins—no one’s looking bad. There’s one blue ribbon at the end, but you’re not playing for a million dollars. Nobody’s going to turn your oven off to do whatever it takes to win.

Not to be too preachy, but with the state of the country being so divisive, to be able to showcase your ethnic background and the part of the country you’re representing, I really thought was a positive message. We all kind of universally come together around food.
GUIDE: Why is it important to celebrate the stories and backgrounds behind food?

ELLIOI: Because people do best with whatever they have. Regardless if you’re of meager means in the South or you’re a second-generation Vietnamese American, I feel that the more people know, the more open they are to the entire culture – not only that dish.

GUIDE: You have more typically worked with professional chefs. What’s the difference between that and working with these home cooks from so many different backgrounds?

ELLIOI: It was eye-opening for me to not see professionals who nowadays live on Instagram and just plate food that looks like it came from Noma, regardless of whether they’re in Omaha or Atlanta. This is more authentic, from the soul: “This is my grandma’s recipe; this is what I love to make for my kids.”

You’re not dealing with tweezers and paintbrushes and things like that. And nobody on the show was there because they wanted to be the bad guy, or the fun one, where they’re playing characters. And none of them are hoping to open their own restaurant tomorrow and were using this show as a platform to promote it. We literally had a 65-year-old grandma making great food.

And I think that’s why The Great British Baking Show connected with so many people. The viewership is “everyday American” and they relate to that. I feel that’s a great direction for food shows to go.

GUIDE: Did you learn anything from getting to experience more regional, home-based food and hear the stories behind dishes?

ELLIOI: Absolutely. I didn't really know that Rhode Island and Providence had such a rooted Italian population, and seeing food coming from a firefighter that he just cooks for his family, sharing his mom’s pasta recipe. Or you get rid of borders and you realize that California, New Mexico, Arizona – that was Mexico, 150 years ago. And then despite having discovered that, it doesn’t change the food all of a sudden. I feel that, even if you were just a passive viewer of this show, you would come away from it saying, “Damn, I didn't know America was so cool.”

I think some PBS viewers are going to be seeing dishes that they've never been exposed to. And they might say, “I want to try to make that,” or “I’d like to go to a restaurant somewhere and have that.” That’s the most exciting thing for me, because as I get older, it’s teaching, inspiring, showing where the food comes from, why they make that, what the ingredients are, the geography, the history – that is so much more rewarding than “I have a Michelin star and I’m on this other show.”

Food should be the thing that introduces you to the who, the what, and the why. For instance, if you keep kosher, you won’t eat shellfish, but then someone else is going to pay $100 for a lobster. You can’t judge.

GUIDE: Why showcase home cooks and their stories?

ELLIOI: I feel that when you cook in a restaurant, you’re pleasing the guest and you’re also being that ego-driven artist. A lot of people just want a giant-ass Caesar salad with croutons, but no, I’ve gotta make it all about the brioche Twinkie. [One of Elliot’s signature dishes in Chicago was a deconstructed Caesar salad that included giant “croutons” of cream-filled brioche bread.]

When you’re at home, you’re just having a great time with friends or family and making tasty food. If you go to a friend’s house and they’re grilling in back and making family-style steaks and charred veggies, that’s way more tasty and fun. I think that’s what’s cool: understanding why people cook and what they do.

Songs My Father Taught Me

Internationally acclaimed cellist Lynn Harrell was born into a musical family: his father, Mack Harrell, was one of the leading baritones of his age, while his mother was the violinist and pedagogue Marjorie Fulton. Harrell died in 2020 at age 76. Revisit this beloved program on Father’s Day which looks back on Harrell’s career and on that of his father, featuring pianist Victor Santiago Asuncion.
