From the President & CEO

Dear Member,

This month, WTTW will bring you an all-new season of Chicago Stories, the only weekly documentary series dedicated to uncovering the sweeping history, rich diversity, and breadth of human experience that shaped our great American city. Over eight weeks, I hope you'll watch as WTTW tells the stories of a tragic school fire, the engineering feat to reverse the flow of the Chicago River, the rebellion staged by George Pullman's rail workers as they fought for their independence, Mayor Richard J. Daley's rise to power and stubbornness in the face of cultural change, Nobel Peace Prize-winning settlement activist Jane Addams, how Chicago became the candy-making capital of the world, AIDS activist Danny Sotomayor, and the rise and fall of Chicago's mail order industry. Join us each week as we take you back to a key moment in Chicago history to provide context and understanding of the parallels to critical issues in our community today.

September also marks the return of some of our blockbuster British dramas – including Professor T, Unforgotten, and Van der Valk, and we premiere two new American Experience programs focusing on racial desegregation and an American Masters profile of labor leader Cesar Chavez.

WFMT's weekly series WFMT Presents has an exciting lineup for September, including a conversation with the acclaimed Grammy Award-winning violinist Joshua Bell, who shares his new album and discusses his role as director of the Academy of St. Martin in the Fields, the London-based chamber orchestra. We'll also preview the Milwaukee Symphony's upcoming season and focus on American pianist Simone Dinnerstein and Argentine composer Osvaldo Golijov. And don't miss a new five-part series on Exploring Music that traces the storied 132-year history of Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Thank you for choosing to spend your time with WTTW and WFMT. We are grateful for your support.

Sincerely,

Sandra Cordova Micek
President & CEO

THE RACE TO REVERSE THE RIVER

FROM THE TIME of Chicago's founding in 1833, residents and businesses alike dealt with waste by dumping it directly into the Chicago River, which flowed into Lake Michigan – the source of the city's drinking water. In response to the major public health crisis that resulted, officials devised a bold solution – to reverse the flow of the Chicago River.

This new film, which will premiere Friday, September 29 at 8:00 pm as part of the new fall season of WTTW's Chicago Stories documentary series, tells the story of that astonishing feat of engineering, the controversies that resulted, and the repercussions still being felt today. We sat down with writer/producer Eddie Griffin and executive producer Anna Chadwick Gardner to learn more about the story and its significance to us today.

The Guide: Why do you think this is a quintessentially Chicago story, and why is it important to tell now?

Eddie Griffin: Without the river's reversal, who knows what would have become of the city? Diseases like typhoid and cholera do not discriminate, so this was a matter of life and death for all Chicagoans. I love this story, because when faced with an impossible task, city leaders just figured out how to get it done.

Anna Chadwick Gardner: This is a classic Chicago story in that Chicagoans came up with big, bold solutions to big problems. It's a fascinating story of desperation and determination.

The Guide: This is a familiar story to many. What will we learn that is new?

Griffin: While it might be common knowledge that the Chicago River was reversed, most people don't know how it was reversed. Once you know the full story, you will never look at the river in the same way.

Gardner: It's a story full of feats of engineering, colorful characters, controversy, and drama. And it's still relevant today, as officials grapple to protect our water supply as the climate crisis leads to more flooding events.

The Guide: We meet some key historical figures in the documentary. Who were they, and how were they involved in the plan to reverse the river?

Griffin: Thousands of planners, workers, and supervisors, over almost a decade, had a hand in reversing the river. It was a self-taught engineer named Ellis Chesbrough who made the plan a reality, but even he died before the project started. So this story really personifies the entire city of Chicago as the "hero." It was too big of a problem for any one person – it took a collective of bold thinkers to solve it.

The Guide: Before engineers arrived at the reversal plan, what were some of the earlier attempts to improve sanitation, and why did they fail?

Griffin: This was not the first time the city had attempted to reverse the river. They tried it back in the 1870s and it worked for a very short time. They used water pumps to run the river water backwards into the I&M Canal, but the waterway was just too narrow, and heavy rains would undo the reversed flow. They were on the right track; they just needed to dig a bigger canal.

Gardner: Chicago was built on low-lying marshland, so wastewater had nowhere to drain. Chesbrough came up with a bold plan: to raise the entire city out of the muck and build a new sewer system on top of the streets. Using an elaborate system of jacks, city buildings were hoisted up to 10 feet, and new streets were built above the sewers. This worked, but the waste still ended up flowing back into the river. So Chesbrough came back with another wild idea: to build a two-mile tunnel underneath Lake Michigan. His plan was to pull cleaner water from an intake crib a mile offshore. And for a time it worked, until the sewage made its way out to the intake. Ultimately, Chesbrough's most audacious proposal had to be implemented:

reversing the Chicago River.

The Guide: Once the reversal project was underway, what were some of the major challenges the workers faced in making it a success?

Griffin: The reversal was an incredibly dangerous project, involving digging and dynamiting through 30 miles of earth and rock. 275 people died digging the canal. But everyone understood the risks and knew how vital it was to get this job completed. There was no turning back.

Gardner: This was dirty, backbreaking work. The canal workers – mostly Eastern European immigrants and African Gardner: Well, it saved lives by allowing Chicago to draw cleaner drinking water from Lake Michigan. That's an undeniable success. But some believe that reversing the river violated the laws of nature and should never have been done. Yes, it saved the city, but it caused new problems like the migration of invasive species, including the Asian Carp, into the river. So some environmentalists are advocating for restoring the river to its natural course.

The Guide: What do you want the audience to take away from watching this film?

Griffin: That when city leaders realized the situation was critical, they came together to get it done. But also that we can, and should,

Executive Producer Anna Chadwick Gardner and Writer-Producer Eddie Griffin

Americans – had no protections. Yet they toiled for eight long years in deplorable conditions, and got the job done.

The Guide: The reversal of the river solved one problem, but created others. What were they?

Griffin: The reversal caused floods downstream of Chicago, and many Illinois farmers were left with waterlogged fields and ruined crops that compromised their livelihoods. And the polluted water devastated entire ecosystems forever.

The Guide: One of the interviewees suggests that we think of the reversal of the river not as a marvel but as a failure. Why?

evaluate the consequences of the reversal along with the problems it solved.

Gardner: Today, Chicagoans can dine at restaurants as boats sail by, stroll along the Riverwalk, or even paddle down the river. This is all possible because of the bold action and vision of our predecessors, who defied the odds to pull off a marvel of human engineering in the name of public health. ■

Best of Studs Terkel: Tony Bennett

From the mid-1940s until his death in July 2023, Tony Bennett reigned among the most popular of vocal entertainers. First heard on WFMT in 1989, Bennett's conversation with Studs Terkel included his championing of the music of Irving Berlin, thoughts on some prominent colleagues (Count Basie, Duke Ellington, Louis Armstrong, and Art Tatum), and why he considers himself to be a storyteller rather than a jazz singer.

Listening to Singers: Ailyn Pérez in Recital

At the close of a hectic season that featured performances of signature roles in London, Berlin, and Paris and the addition of three new roles to her repertoire in New York, Naples, and Santa Fe, soprano Ailyn Pérez remembered to include her native Chicago audience with this recital with her friend, pianist Kevin Murphy. This homecoming solo concert (recorded in between performances of Dvořák's Rusalka with fellow Santa Fe debutante Lidiya Yankovskaya conducting) marked a return to Ravinia's Martin Theatre, the site of early career triumphs in Mozartian roles under the baton of James Conlon.

From the 2023 BBC Proms

The Guardian described the joint debut of the dazzling pianist Yuja Wang and 27-year old phenom conductor Klaus Mäkelä at the BBC Proms 2022 with the Oslo Philharmonic as “breathtaking” and “virtuosic on every level, both pianistic and orchestral.” Last month, Wang and Mäkelä returned to the Proms, this time with the BBC Symphony Orchestra, for a captivating performance of Rachmaninoff’s technically demanding Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini—a tour de force for any soloist. Considering Wang’s much-lauded quadruple concerto to Rachmaninoff marathon with the Philadelphia Orchestra in January, a single concerto seems like child’s play.

Los Angeles Philharmonic

The penultimate program in the series on WFMT features the world premiere of an LA Phil commission by California native Gabriella Smith. Lost Coast is a cello concerto inspired by a backpacking trip she took in a remote section of northern California coastline called the Lost Coast Trail. Smith says the title Lost Coast has taken on a secondary meaning because of climate change—an expression of loss and fear as well as beauty, wonder, and hope in getting to work on climate solutions. She wrote the work for a friend and former classmate at Curtis Institute, Chicago native cellist Gabriel Cabezas.
